

Wei Xiong (熊巍), clinical medicine of eight-year program of 2008, Medicine School of Xiangya, Central South University.

I was born in Hengyang, Hunan, 1989. Hengyang is beautiful city, known as “Wild Goose City (雁城)” historically. It’s said that the wild geese used to rest here while flying south for winter.

Admitted to Xiangya in 2008, I have determined to be a cardiac surgeon, and my mentor in China is Dr. Xinmin Zhou (周新民). Right now, I come to the University of Michigan Medicine School as a visiting student for 2 years until August 2017. Very Luck, I am doing research on Cardiovascular Diseases, especially Stem Cell Models, in the Lab of Pro Y. Eugene Chen. Pro Chen is the most excellent mentor I ever have, every encyclopedic and inspiring. Thought not long, I was touched by how everyone shows respect to each other, whoever you are, even animals. I am treated kind even though having been faced with many difficulties, which all makes me love Ann Arbor sincerely. It’s the start of this wonderful encounter and I hope it will not end soon.

I am a man pursuing perfect, which is good for my work now. However, I am not just an “academic guy”. In relaxing time, I enjoy playing basketball, hiking, and now learning football, and movies, music, novels. By the way, I really love movies by Clint Eastwood, Al Pacino, and Christopher Nolan, and music by Adele.
